"WOLF OF LASALLE ST." DIED TODAY IN FEDERAL JAIL

Paralysis Took Life of John W. Worthington Today

Atlanta, Ga., Mar. 2—(AP)—John W. Worthington of Chicago, known as the "Wolf of LaSalle Street" died at the federal penitentiary today where he was serving a term for using the mails to defraud.

Death was caused by a stroke of paralysis. Worthington was imprisoned on October 10 to serve two years. Suffering from diabetes and a former paralytic stroke, he had to be carried to the prison. During his confinement he was kept in the hospital and treated for diabetes. His condition was thought to be improving.

Funeral arrangements will not be completed until word is received from relatives. Jane Allen, actress, is Worthington's daughter.

After charges were made against him in Chicago he fled to Mexico, where he remained several years before returning voluntarily to face accusations. Due to his physical condition, special efforts were made to obtain commutation of sentence, but all efforts proved fruitless.

Netted Him $2,500,000.

Worthington's operations are estimated to have netted him more than $2,500,000.

At one time he was head of a chain of banks in Alabama; then he became a confidence operator and piled up a fortune from speculative ventures which eventually involved him with the government and caused his flight to Mexico.

Making his will before entering prison here, Worthington stated that the bulk of his fortune goes to his daughters, Mrs. Allen Pike, Chicago, known in moving picture circles as Jane Allen, and Mrs. John Rogers of New Rochelle, Long Island. Another $200,000 was bequeathed to his granddaughter Miss Helen Rogers and $25,000 to Dr. Ronald McKibben, a Los Angeles physician.

REMARKABLE CAREER

Chicago, Mar. 2—(AP)—John W. Worthington, "The Wolf of LaSalle Street," had one of the most remarkable careers ever linked with the financial history of Chicago.

It was only last fall that he was placed in a cell, although efforts had been made since 1902 to imprison him.

Worthington was described by a detective as "the man who started a half million dollar bank on his breath." He spent much of his life explaining his million dollar transactions.

Little is known of his life before 1902, when he was released from a New York prison after serving four years for swindling. In 1906 he was the center of litigation over "The Visible Typewriter Company," which he promoted. In 1911 he founded the American Banking Association of Chicago, a private bank, alleged never to have had more than a paper existence.

In 1914, this bubble burst.

Not until 1923 was the government successful in bringing him to trial and conviction on a ten year old mail fraud indictment, the outgrowth of the sale of worthless securities.

Pending appeal, Worthington fled to Mexico, returning on a stretcher in 1925. His daughter Alice, known as Jane Allen, an actress, accompanied him.

He said he had hoped that death would forestall imprisonment.

Another gangster suspect held by police is believed to have entered the country in the same manner as Accardi, fleeing from an Italian ship when it docked at New York. A memorandum book carried by Accardi contained a list of donors to a defense fund for two gangsters charged with slaying two Chicago policemen.

Mellon Believes Public's Mind is Made Up on Issue

Washington, Mar. 2—(AP)—The public has made up its mind for or against prohibition and a general investigation of the subject would have little effect, in the opinion of Secretary Mellon. He does not share the belief of Assistant Secretary Andrews in charge of prohibition enforcement, that an inquiry by a presidential commission would impress the people and assist dry forces.

Mr. Andrews expressed hope that the inquiry begun yesterday by the house alcoholic liquor traffic committee would lead to a recommendation for appointment of the commission, but his superior believes the public now knows the facts concerning prohibition and that it has access to all the information which might be assembled by any commission.

He was indicted last November in connection with the failure of the Ferguson-McKinney Manufacturing Company. He was charged jointly with Forest Ferguson, president of Ferguson-McKinney, with making a false financial statement on which banks loaned $2,000,000. TREASURY DEPT. DEFINES SOME TAX PROVISIONS

Speeds Up Drafting of Regulations Under New Tax Statute

Washington, Mar. 2—(AP)—With the time within which the public must file its tax returns rapidly expiring, treasury department experts are speeding up the drafting of regulations to guide tax payers.

As the first step, the new revenue law is declared effective as of 10:25 a. m., Feb. 26, when President Coolidge signed the measure. The changed inheritance tax rates also are effective as of that hour as are many other repealed or modified taxes while the income tax provisions are applicable to incomes of last year on which payments will be made this year.

Reduction of the automobile passenger tax from five to three percent will become effective at midnight March 23 along with the increased exemptions on admissions which thereafter will include tickets of 75c and less. On that date also repeat of the stamp taxes on deeds of conveyances and custom warehouse entries and withdrawals will go into effect.

Repeal of the taxes on capital stock, tobacco manufacturers, brokers, bowling alleys, billiard rooms, shooting galleries, riding academies and automobiles for hire will become effective on June 30.

The new act leaves room for a more scientific tax measure, but still promises a material contribution to economic advancement in the opinion of J. W. O'Leary, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The committee decided to meet on Thursday to consider farm relief.

Failure of the farm delegates to be ready to appear today was criticized at the committee meeting by Representatives Jones, Democrat, Texas, who said agricultural organizations were "criticizing congress for failure to pass legislation while delaying to come forward with their suggestions."

Chairman Haugen said they were saving time by getting together and condensing their arguments before appearing.

Washington, Mar. 2—(AP)—Congress turned to the growing problem of farmer relief legislation today with the house agriculture committee opening hearings on a number of measures, including the Dickinson bill, designed to aid disposal of surplus crops.

The committee and congress were warned before hand that if no relief legislation is enacted at this session, "new political alliances" could be expected to come from the "common economic interest of the south, west and central agricultural states."

The warning came from George N. Peck, chairman of the executive committee of 22 of the north central states agricultural conference, which has charge of the program adopted recently at a farmers conference at Des Moines.

In turn, the farm leaders were cautioned against "handing a remedy to us and tell us to take this or we'll know the reason why."

Specific plans to remedy the situation is what the committee wants, the farm representatives were told at a conference last night by Representative Purnell of Indiana, ranking republican on the committee.

He and two republican associates on the committee. Representative Williams of Illinois and Anderson of Minnesota joined in assurances that they would do all possible to help agriculture, while Senator Brookhart, republican, Iowa, advised the farmers to ignore modesty in their demands for financial aid.

Thousands of bookings are from students and others who must economize. The way for their trips has been opened through the recent establishment of tourist third cabin quarters which provide a round trip in clean, comfortable quarters for $175 to $180.

CONGRESS TURNS ATTENTION TODAY TO FARM PROBLEM

House Committee Opens Hearing on Numerous Relief Measures

WASHINGTON, March 2—(AP)—The long anticipated opening of hearings on farm relief legislation by the house agriculture committee failed to materialize today. A last minute shift of plans by farm organization leaders led to a postponement until tomorrow or possibly Thursday.

The committee will use the interval to clean its legislative slate of all matters except farm relief.

Later the committee decided to meet on Thursday to consider farm relief.

Failure of the farm delegates to be ready to appear today was criticized at the committee meeting by Representatives Jones, Democrat, Texas, who said agricultural organizations were "criticizing congress for failure to pass legislation while delaying to come forward with their suggestions."

Thompson Disagrees With Colleagues in Decision

Springfield, Ill., Mar. 2—(AP)—Declaring his opinion that the supreme court is without authority to say where the Illinois Commerce Commission shall hold hearings, Justice Floyd Thompson has filed a dissenting opinion in the Danville Brick Case.

"It is for the legislature to say what authority the commission shall possess and in what manner it shall exercise the granted authority," his opinion said.

It will be ineffective, however, as the commission has already acted on the majority ruling.

CO-OP. ELEVATORS IN LEE EXEMPTED FROM INCOME TAX

Farmers' Organizations in County Benefit in New Tax Bill

Due to the persistent efforts of the Illinois Agricultural Association through Geo. R. Wicker, director of the Association's department of cooperative accounting, the new federal tax bill passed by Congress contains an important clause which exempts farmers' cooperative organizations from paying income taxes.

According to information just received by the Lee County Farm Bureau the amendment secured by the Illinois Agricultural Association clarifies a section of the previous tax law under which the federal tax department heretofore failed to carry out the spirit of the law as enacted by Congress.

However, in the new tax law, the exemptions are specific and result in an annual saving of from $200 to $300 to at least 300 farmers' elevators in Illinois several of which are in Lee County including Scarboro Farmers' Elevator, Farmers' Elevator of Harmons, Farmers' Elevator, Franklin Grove, Farmers' Elevator of West Brooklyn, Paw Paw Cooperative Grain Company, Paw Paw, Roxbury Elevator, Paw Paw, Henkel Grain Co., Mendota, Eldena Cooperative Co., Eldena, Sublette Farmers' Elevator Co., Sublette, and Walton Elevator Co., Walton.

The total saving for all cooperatives in the United States is estimated by Mr. Wicker as approximately $1,125,000 annually. The L. A. A. had been after this exemption for nearly two years.

Girl Scouting, Purposes, Aims, Fully Explained

It has been said that the life of a nation cannot rise above the level of its womanhood. If this is true, then an organization through which thousands of girls are finding expression for their powers and purposes can and must be a vital factor in national and international life. The Girl Scouts is an international movement, having national organizations in every country. This great organization is making itself increasingly felt in the economic, physical, social, mental and spiritual development of young women. It is at work in city, town, rural and student communities, and among all young women, irrespective of race, class or creed. The demand for properly qualified and trained women for leaders has resulted in the development of a recognized profession for women—Girl Scout Directorship or Leadership.

The leader should meet the required standard of administrative ability, educational background, and Christian faith. Above all, her life and work must be permeated by a sincere and intelligent Christian purpose. She knows something of the psychological, emotional, social and intellectual interests and problems of groups of girls and women according to age and occupation. Such a leader should have the personality and the poise which makes it possible to extend and encourage friendliness without fear of rivalry. Her work is to be the understanding interpreter—to lead girls in planning those activities which will supplement the activities in the home, school, church and community. This is done in such a way as to develop in each individual girl an attitude toward everyday life and toward those with whom she lives that will lead naturally to the application of Christian principles to all of life. She strives to promote the spirit of comradeship between boys and girls. The cultivation of social relationships on this basis is the best preparation for future wholesome companionship between men and women.

The Director must have not only sufficient knowledge and imagination to see clearly the needs of young girls, but also resourcefulness for building a program to meet these needs.

President Encouraged in Developments With Mexico

Washington, Mar. 2.—(AP)—President Coolidge sees no reason why the controversy between the United States and Mexico over retroactive and confiscatory provisions of the anti-alien land and petroleum laws cannot be satisfactorily adjusted.

The President was said at the White House today to hold the belief that the differences between the two governments now are not as great as the public has held. Examination of state department records, he understands, will show that the points at issue have been relieved of their original importance by recent developments.

March Emulates a Polar Bear; Eight Above Registered

March not only came in like a lion; it emulated a new species—a cross between a lion and a genuine old Polar Bear. As a result of the gales which swept out of the northwest all day Monday and all night, the mercury took a precipitated drop and registered a minimum of 8 degrees above zero during the night.

That 8 above seemed much colder, however, because of the strong bitter wind.

There was little relief during the day, either, for at 10:30 o'clock this morning it had only crawled up to 12 above.

And the weatherman says "continued cold" for tonight and tomorrow. But cheer up! Spring is coming.

SONG—

When I am dead, my dearest,
Sing no sad songs for me;
Faint thou no roses at my head,
Nor shady cypress tree;
Be the green grass above me
With showers and dewdrops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
And if thou wilt, forget.

I shall not see the shadows,
I shall not feel the rain;
I shall not hear the nightingale
Sing on, as if in pain;
And dreaming through the twilight
That do not rise nor set,
Haply I may remember,
And haply may forget.

—Christina Rossetti.

Attended Banquet Cornell College

Mt. Vernon, Ia.—Observing Washington's birthday in a most fitting manner, Cornelia Millar and Nellie Euter of Dixon, Ill., with more than 200 other freshmen at Cornell college, attended a freshman banquet which proved to be one of the most successful social events of the year at Cornell.

Firmly organized through their activities during "Freshman Week," when the freshman class was called to Cornell a week in advance of the upper classmen to "get acquainted" with each other and their college, the new students were able to work out their banquet with perfection of detail. The dinner was served in Bowman hall dining room, decorated in red, white and blue for the occasion. Guests of honor included President and Mrs. Harlan Updegraff and Joe T. Meade, freshman advisor, and Mrs. Meade.

With John Clements of Taylorville, Ill., freshman president, acting as toastmaster, a toast program was carried out, including such subjects as "The Cherry Tree Episode," "Valley Forge" and "Washington's Inauguration."

Those assisting Mrs. Barton in celebrating her birthday were Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Cox and family, Mr. and Mrs. William Sieling and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Grant Barton.

Mr. Stanard received many beautiful cards and greetings from his friends. After a pleasant afternoon, all departed, wishing Mr. Stanard many such happy birthdays.

royal consort's philanderings and straying from the path of matrimonial loyalty and fidelity.

We are given the picture of the beautiful Alexandra appearing with her kingly spouse, Edward, at a ball in Paris, only to be presented to women known as his playthings, while a titter spreads around the ball room.

"It is to the Alexandra of this moment that my thoughts always return," writes a witness of this scene. "Her face betrayed nothing. She was still smiling, charming, gracious, outwardly oblivious to the meaning of the episode."

"Her attitude had a suggestion of nobility which seemed to raise her above such tawdry things as scandal, to invest her with a dignity which was beyond even the suggestion of reproach."

"And it was this brave poise that carried her, serenely and with upraised head, to the end of the chapter."

"Brave poise," "Serenity," "Good words for troubled wives to 'salt down,' methinks."

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS—
Water Wagon.

Castors screwed in the corners of a board a foot square make an excellent wagon for moving about a pail of water when scrubbing or cleaning.

Rust Stains.
Rust stains may be removed by covering the stain with salt after wetting in boiling water. Then lay in hot sunshine over bright tin, and squeeze out juice of lemon or tomato. Rinse in hot water and repeat if necessary.

Grass Stains.
Grass stains may be removed by rubbing with molasses. Then let lie over night and rinse with tepid water. Repeat if necessary. If a brown stain is left, wet with weak chloride of lime water and hang in hot sunshine or near a fire.

Light for Plants.
Fuchsia, ferns, pansies, violets and dwarf Japanese morning glories may be planted in a north light. Two hours of sunlight a day are sufficient for these flowers, if soil conditions are correct.

BY CYNTHIA GREY—
Now like little children we grown-ups are! Little children, with their noses glued to the pages of old fairy tales, sighing with envy for the lot of the prince and the princess who wear jeweled crowns and live in palaces!

Even as we grow older we cannot imagine kings and queens and princes and princesses as unhappy mortals, ever.

I recall my own shock at hearing of the mousetrap in the famous Queen's Doll House and exhibition in England for so long. The mousetrap was placed in the miniature boudoir in the very spot it occupied in the queen's actual chamber.

It seemed unbelievable to me that queen's toes were subject to the philanderings of indiscriminate mice, just as are the toes of plain humans.

And the shock is even more acute now to read that the lift of the late Queen Alexandra was shadowed by her

The WOMAN'S DAY by Allene Sumner

Have You Read?

"Diary of a Young Lady of Fashion in the Year 1764-1765, by Miss Cleone Knox of County Down, Ireland." This is a true diary unearthed from some forgotten attic by a smart publisher, although as real life it's almost too good to be true. Miss Cleone sparkles like dew on the rose or uncorked ginger ale.

Mothers will observe that girls have changed not an iota in 162 years! Cleone's amorous swain climbs the ivy vine leading to his love's chamber. The ivy breaks and down comes swain, red plush suit, and all. Miss Cleone frankly admits that it is well the ivy broke as "I have a strong attachment for this knave."

What It's All About!

PAROLED CONVICTS.

It has developed that Clark, the Omaha sniper, was paroled from the Iowa penitentiary, where he served four years for killing cattle. He could have been kept until expiration of a period of ten years. He has admitted carrying a gun for two years.

So often these tragedies are traced to paroled prisoners that anger on the part of the public results. The thought that a man might have been kept in prison is a recurring one.

On the other hand, one of the persons identifying Clark was the Rev. J. R. Perkins of Council Bluffs, who was warden of the penitentiary during part of Clark's confinement. He said Clark was a model prisoner. Prison conduct and the attitude of the prisoner through the period of restraint, combined with consideration of the magnitude of the offense, determines the time the convict shall serve under indeterminate sentences. The question arises also, if a definite sentence had been pronounced would a judge have sentenced Clark to more than four years for killing cattle? We know now that a man of Clark's mentality should be confined at all times. It probably would have been as disastrous to have released him at the end of ten years as at the end of four.

Parole and pardon officials generally are under fire. Parole officials work on one theory, a high-minded one perhaps, and the public is stirred by the facts, not the theory.

Commenting upon the Case of Clark, the Marshalltown Times-Republican concludes:

"It is well for us to inquire into and study seriously the matter of paroles and parole boards, not with the idea or purpose of 'getting something on' the boards or abolishing the system of parole, but with the idea and the purpose of better protection of organized society."

It quotes the Minneapolis Journal as follows:

"That the present parole board is at least half blind to the real object of the punishment of crime, is indicated in its last report, which says flatly that 'education of the prisoner is the fundamental purpose of imprisonment.'"

"Rank nonsense! Were education the fundamental purpose of imprisonment, we should send our crooks to college instead of to Stillwater and St. Cloud."

"But this bosh about education being the chief aim of punishment throws a strong light on the primary defect in Minnesota, penal system. Instead of trying to put the fear of the law into the hearts of all potential criminals outside of jail, we have been trying to make Little Rollos out of all the roughnecks inside of jail."

That is the public's view. It is the percentage of paroled convicts that goes wrong that receives our attention. Probably Will Colvin, superintendent of pardons and paroles of Illinois, expresses the view of parole boards in general. In a letter directed to the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs in answer to criticism, he said:

"Do you know that in the last five years the present division of pardons and paroles has passed more prisoners to the maximum sentence than in all the years added together from the time the parole law went into effect in 1895 up to the year 1920; or, in other words, that in five years the division of pardons and paroles has passed more maximum sentences than in the twenty-five years preceding 1920. I am sure you do not know this for the very simple reason that no one knows it other than myself."

"With a large number of paroles each year the record for the last four years shows eighteen failures out of every 100 paroled. Less than 1 percent of the total number paroled each year are returned for the commission of new crimes."

He says that 90 percent of the incoming population of the penitentiary at Joliet during the last ten years has been first termers.

Of the parole system this may be said. Under the old plan of definite sentences fixed by judges, probably only a small proportion were maximum terms. The parole officials have the privilege of requiring the prisoner to serve the maximum term, but then comes release. All prisoners are released some time, except those under life sentence. By the parole system they are released ahead of the expiration of the maximum period, and the parole officers keep a string on paroled men until they are held fit for full release.

Easter's coming. We'll need eggs. Lay on, MacPlymouth.

The nice thing about buying a home is the tires don't wear out.

In Alma, Ga., a boy put a stick of dynamite on the fire. It made a good fire and so did the house.

Sometimes a girl smokes so many cigarets about all she has in her hope chest is one lung.

In Jasper, Ala., a hen laid 70 eggs in 71 days, including Christmas and New Year's.

You must pay for your sins, unless you can sell them to some confession magazine and collect for them.

Every young fellow should put aside about a million dollars for his hope chest.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

Olive Roberts Barton
NO. 26—SOME FUNNY PEOPLE

"How do you do, gentlemen and a lady," said the Sandwich Man.

"I wonder where the elevator is," said Nancy looking around.

"Yes, I wonder," said Nick. "All I can see is the sign."

The sign said, "Elevator to China."

"That's all there is," said Jupe, the kangaroo, looked, and Hickydoo, the wooden man, looked, and the Twins looked. Even Paddy-foot, the mouse, who stayed in Jupe's pocket, peered about with his little sharp eyes. But many a thing could he see, either. Nothing but the sign!

Suddenly there was a whirring noise and Nancy cried out, "We're sinking!"

And so they were. A piece of ground on which they were standing beside the road, began to go down like the iron elevators you have seen on sidewalks for taking big boxes into cellars.

"Help!" shouted Nancy. "Help! Help! Help!"

"Oh, hush!" said Nick. "It must be all right. Its just some more magic. And if it saves us a trip around the world what's the difference?"

"That's what I say," agreed Jupe, switching his tail into a corner to get it out of the way.

"I'll have to look in my index and see what it says about elevators," said Hickydoo.

But this time no one seemed interested. There was too much to be seen around them.

The elevator had gone down about a quarter of a mile now. And as it was open on all sides, it was quite possible to see what was going on in the center of the earth. Every little while the elevator stopped to take on more passengers who were all going to China, it seemed.

First there was a nice friendly mud-turtle.

"How do you do, friends and neighbors," said he, settling his eyes-glasses firmly on his nose. "The sunset was beautiful this morning. I suppose you noticed it."

Before anyone could reply to this queer speech, a muskrat got on.

"Good morning, neighbors and friends," said he. "I never eat spinach without plenty of pepper and twice as much salt. Thank you, I wish you the same."

"I wonder what he expects us to say to that," thought Nancy. But she didn't say anything, and neither did Nick nor the others.

Fortunately the elevator stopped again, and this time it was a Sandwich Man.

One side of him said, "Things reduced at Smiths." And the other side said, "Dine at the Palace. Stew—fifteen cents. With pickles—twenty-five cents extra."

"How do you do, gentlemen and lady," said the Sandwich-Man. "The paper says it's going to rain, but personally I prefer the dark ones with gray linings. They always fit better and besides you can save the juice for gravy."

"They're all crazy," whispered Nick to Nancy and Nancy nodded back. She quite agreed, and Jupe looked as though he were going to burst if he didn't get a chance to laugh soon.

But all this time Hickydoo was so busy looking in his index, he hadn't noticed a thing.

The elevator went down, down, and down. Always down!

The mud turtle got off, the muskrat got off, and the Sandwich-Man got off, too, finally. Then other people got on.

One was a fat chinaman with a pigtail.

"Do you know where we can get a bunch of bottle-green dragon-floes?" Nick asked him.

"Ooly booly ony yippy yang sang werry," chattered the Chinaman.

"Yes, sir! I guess you're right," said Nick with a grin.

Fellowship of Prayer

Daily Lenten Bible reading and meditation prepared for Commission of Evangelism of Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Read Jn. 6:48-59. Text: 6:56.

"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in Him."

Meditation—This very concrete symbol is coupled with words which emphasize that they are symbols.

"The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life."

Jesus used the vivid impression made upon them as they ate the paschal lamb and drank the ceremonial wine and said in arresting phrase, "Except ye eat this flesh and drink this blood ye have not life in yourself."

He spoke in terms of the first century physiology. They thought of the body as the instrument of the life and of the blood as the life.

If you eat this flesh of the lamb you incorporate in it your own body, and as you partake of the blood you incorporate the spirit, the life with your own life.

Prayer—O Thou who are our life and our light. Help us not to stumble at Thy words, coming to us clothed in the experiences of long ago. Help us not to miss the perfect insight of his parable. Help us to live them every day until the shadows lengthen and we are called hence to be with Thee. Amen.

Is this your BIRTHDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 2

If so, you will always be fond of science and literature.

Politics will be a great bore to you and you will care little for political and business friends.

You will make many friends but not among those prominent in daily life.

You have executive ability but will have little desire to put it into practical use.

Your married life will have many hitches but eventually it will round out all right.

HE'S NOT CLEVER

"What have you been doing, Edward?"

"A clever wife never asks what her husband has been doing."

"But a clever man may ask if his wife—"

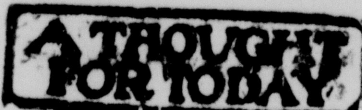

"Oh, my dear, a clever man never has a wife."

New Income Tax Law Told in a Nutshell

If you are single and support in your home one or more persons closely related to you and over whom you exercise family control, you are the head of a family and entitled under the Revenue Act of 1926 to the same personal exemption allowed a married person, $3,500. In addition, a taxpayer is entitled to a credit of $400 for each person dependent upon him for chief support, if such person is either under 18 years of age or incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective. Such dependent need not be a member of the taxpayer's household. For example, an unmarried son who supports in his home an aged mother is entitled to an exemption of $3,500 plus the $400 credit for a dependent, a total of $3,900. If from choice the mother lived in another city, the son, although her chief support, would be entitled only to the $1,500 exemption, plus the $400 credit. The mother not living with him, he is not considered the head of a family.

An exemption as the head of a family can be claimed by only one member of a household.

The $400 credit does not apply to the wife or husband of a taxpayer, though one may be totally dependent upon the other.

I said in my haste, all men are liars.—Ps. 116:11.

Haste and rashness are storms and tempests, breaking and wrecking business; but nimbleness is a full, fair wind, blowing it with speed to haven.—Fuller.

Dr. Cummings' Health Column

BY DR. HUGH S. CUMMING

Surgeon General, U. S. Public Health Service

Yellow fever is a disease which is spread by infected mosquitoes. This species of mosquito, however, is not much of a traveler in so far as his wings may carry him, but infected insects may be, and often have been, carried by vessels and trains across seas and over wide areas. Yellow fever, of course, is also carried from place to place by human beings.

Typical fever is transmitted only through vermin attached to clothing of infected persons.

Bubonic plague is a disease that is transmitted from one region to another by plague-infected rats carried as stowaway passengers hidden in crates or boxes of merchandise or quarantined in the ship's holds or store rooms. One infected rat gaining access to a vessel in an infected port transmits the disease to other rats on the vessel by means of fleas, and eventually these rodents carry the disease into far distant ports.

To prevent the entry of these diseases, quarantine authorities direct their efforts very largely to the destruction of insects and rodents that transmit infection. Vessels arriving at American ports from infected countries are fumigated throughout. In some instances to destroy rats and fleas, in others to destroy mosquitoes.

Before ship fumigation became a rather common practice, the larger trans-oceanic vessels were heavily infested. It was no unusual thing to find several hundred rats on one of the ships, but of recent years this condition has changed due to the persistent fumigation of vessels by the American authorities. The quarantine officer at San Francisco, for instance, reports that of four hundred and ninety vessels fumigated, rodents were recovered from only one hundred.

The latest agent of ship fumigation is a gas composed of hydrocyanic acid and tear gas. This product, which is called cyanogen chloride, is one of the deadliest gases known, but possesses the added advantage of giving warning of its presence. Even in small quantities, it is so irritating to the eyes, nose and throat that careless or ignorant persons cannot well enter a compartment that contains even a small quantity of the gas.

LADY MOSLEY TO VISIT PROPERTY WHICH MADE HER

British Socialist to Inspect Mines Her Father Owned

Chicago, Mar. 2.—(AP)—From an Illinois coal mine to a fashionable club drawing room in Chicago, in one day, was the record of Lady Cynthia Mosley, daughter of Lord Curzon and granddaughter of the late Lord Z. Leiter, Chicago merchant.

Although in the city several days with the "gold coast" eagerly awaiting an immediate social appearance, Lady Cynthia and Captain Oswald Mosley, her husband and labor party member of the British parliament today saw their names in newspaper society columns for the first time. While here they had spent most of the time meeting leaders of the socialist party and studying working conditions.

But last night after spending the day in the coal fields at LaSalle, Illinois, Captain and Mrs. Mosley attended an informal reception arranged in their honor by members of the English speaking union.

Chicago, Mar. 1.—(AP)—Lady Cynthia Mosley and her husband, Captain Oswald Mosley, M. P. socialists, left Chicago today to visit the coal field of southern Illinois from which a large part of the Leiter fortune, to which Lady Mosley is an heir, was taken. Their tour will include inspection of the famous Leiter mines at Zeigler, Ill., which is one of the main bones of contention between the heirs of the late Lord Z. Leiter, including Lady Mary Hyde, Countess of Suffolk and Berke, and the children of Marquis Curzon and the former Mary Leiter, who was Lady Mosley's mother, are demanding an accounting of Joseph Leiter as trustee of his father's estate, extending over a period of 20 years.

The Mosleys will return to Chicago on Tuesday to attend a dinner given

Nothing Known of Man Who Suicided on Friday

Champaign—Other than that his name is believed to be Fred Weaver and his former place of residence East St. Louis, nothing has been learned about the man who committed suicide here Friday night. The body is being held in hope relatives can be located.

—Insure your auto with Hal Barwell. Do it now.

New York—In the early days of the West there was an unwritten law, so runs the tradition, that no man asked any other man who he was or where he came from.

There's just such a code on Broadway among a certain type of chorus girl and cabaret singer.

These girls—they are all ages and types—drift in from somewhere, take their jobs and do their work, fail or succeed, and no questions are asked.

Sometimes they use true names and sometimes they adopt the first name that seems sufficiently theatrical.

Not that all shows and cabaret girls have shady pasts, any more than that all the men who settled the West or pioneered in South Sea trading had pasts. But there are a sufficient number to make it embarrassing, and within certain groups there is such promiscuity of life and love as to create a cult of closed mouths.

Gossip goes about as it will in any circle.

To illustrate the point: the other day the body of a young woman was found upon a snowdrift on a street in the upper Fifties. There was a four or five day mystery and then she was identified as one Elsie Regan, who entertained in a certain cafe.

The Potter's field loomed ahead. Fellow chorines raised the price of a coffin and funeral service, but when the undertaker asked them for some information regarding their dancing partner they looked at him and replied: "Be yourself."

The undertaker's report went something like this: "The girls said they knew nothing of her previous life. Her stage career or what religious preference she might have."

They know nothing about her. She had just come in and gone to work. The girl with whom she had been chummiest knew the least.

And don't get the idea that this code of "no questions asked" is enforced merely because of "shady pasts."

Golden pasts are as frequently the cause of silence. Young women who are daughters of prominent families but don't want their parents to know what they are doing, women who once occupied positions in "society" and don't want "social friends" to find out girls who have run away from home, girls who have left husbands, girls who are trying to get enough experience to get on the stage, and, of course, the rank and file to whom it means nothing but a job.

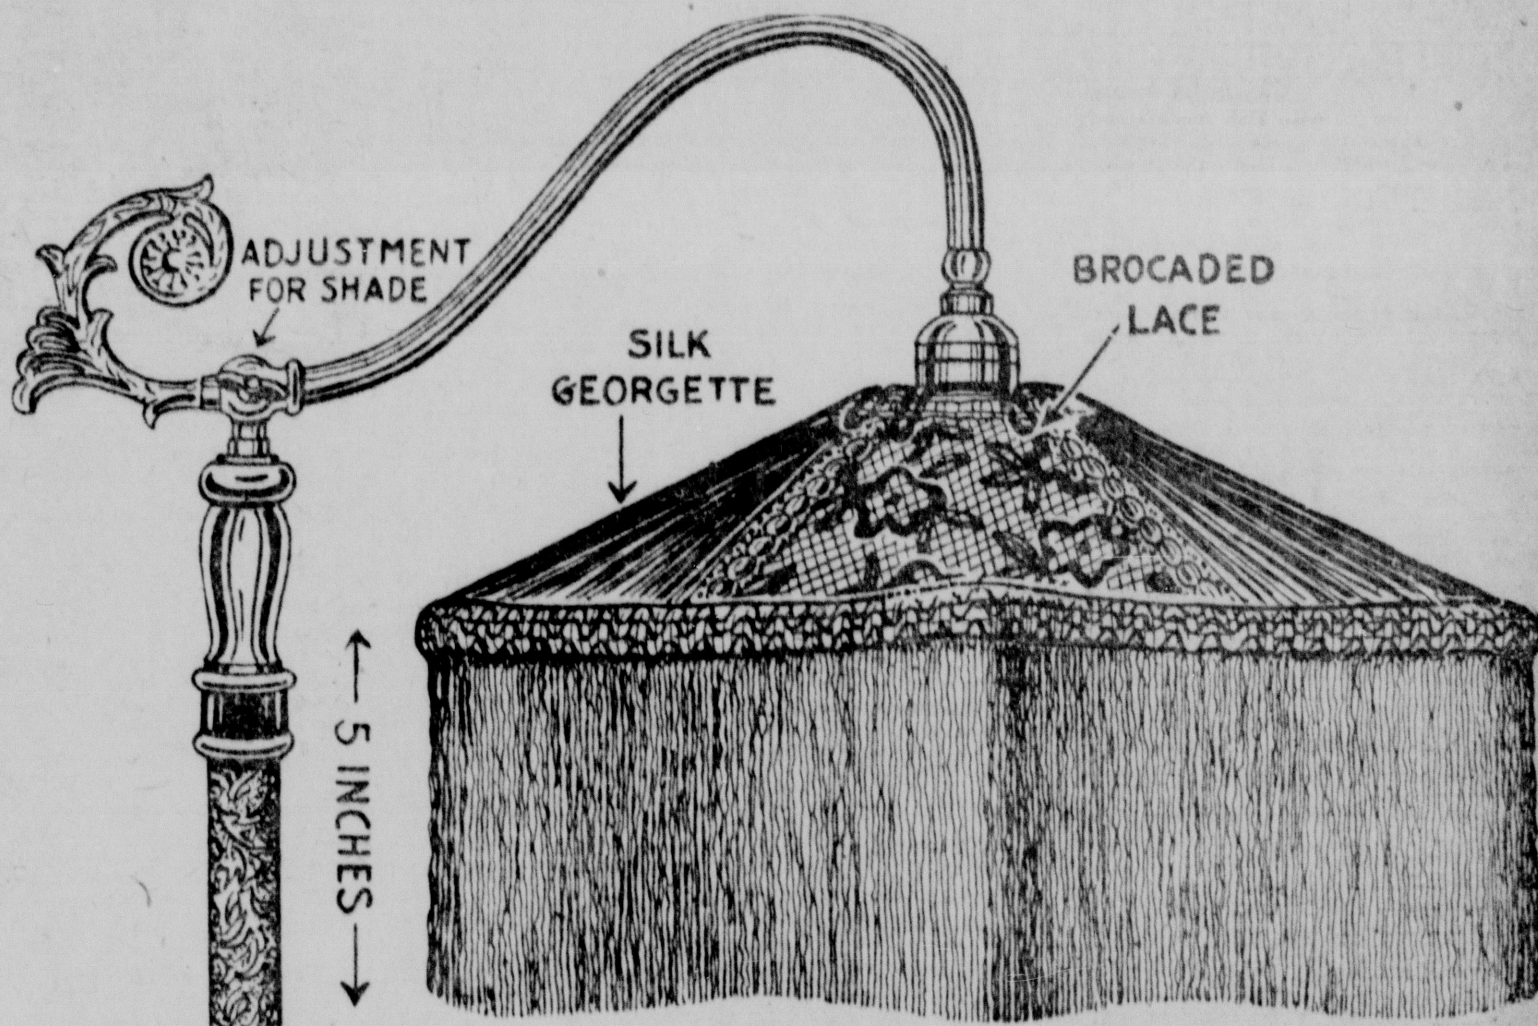

A truly democratic little world this—where each human that enters it is accepted on the basis of what she is and can do and it's nobody's business who you were or where you came from.

New Method Quickly Banishes Heavy Coughs

Why be annoyed and weakened by persistent, strength-sapping coughing spells when you can, through a very simple treatment, quickly stop all irritation and very often banish the trouble entirely in 24 hours?

This treatment is based on the famous prescription known as Dr. King's New Discovery for Coughs. You take just one teaspoonful at bed-time and hold it in your throat for 15 or 20 seconds before swallowing it. The prescription has a double action. It not only soothes and heals soreness and irritation, but it quickly removes the phlegm and congestion which are the real cause of night coughing. Thus, with the throat soothed and cleared, coughing stops quickly and you sleep all night undisturbed.

Dr. King's New Discovery is for coughs, chest colds, sore throat, hoarseness, bronchitis, spasmodic croup, etc. Fine for children as well as grown-ups—no harmful drugs. Economical, too, as the dose is only one teaspoonful. At all good druggists. Ask for

Purdue Takes Leadership in Big Ten Quintet Race

Chicago, Mar. 2.—(AP)—With but one more game on the team's schedule and that not expected to prove difficult Purdue leads the Western Conference basketball race. The Hoosiers won the leadership from Illinois last night by winning 28 to 23 on their home floor.

Michigan, which upset the Big Ten boys last week by winning from both Wisconsin and Illinois, repeated against the Badgers last night to go into a tie for second with Ohio State, Iowa and Illinois. The game went to Michigan, 24-23.

Purdue's last game is with North western Saturday night when Ohio will meet Michigan and the Illinois entertain Indiana. Most of the conference variances play through next week.

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

Feel hungry and "fidgety" before lunch?—try this

To feel right through the morning, you must have well-balanced, complete food at breakfast. At most other meals—that is, at luncheon and at dinner—you usually get that kind of food.

But at breakfast the great dietary mistake is most often made—a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder; 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamins and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Food that should start every breakfast in your home.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

THE VERY IDEA by Hal Cochran

It happens just once in a lifetime, of course, but it gives kids a thrill in full measure. The first pair of long pants is always the source of real, mainly feeling, and pleasure.

I guess it's just part of a boy's life to start and dream from the day he is born, of growing up big to the time when he'll part with the short ones—then long ones are worn.

Most any good mother is dreading the day when her son will grow out of his teens. But fathers, of course, never take it that way, for they've grown up and know what it means.

To step out where all of the world takes its slants! Imagine the thrill, if you can. To youngsters, the first pair of grown-up long pants, is the jump between boyhood and man.

No question a youngster asks, "Is it unless the parents can't answer it."

Today is the time you forget a lot of things you learned yesterday, and tomorrow is too late for it to dawn on you.

It makes a nice looking picture when a father is snuggled with his hand on his son's shoulder—but would be more natural if the son had his hand in his dad's pocket.

If you doubt that this is the land of the brave—look at the marriage rate.

He had his family tree looked up. It nearly caused a riot. And then it cost him twice as much to keep the darn thing quiet.

NOW, HONESTLY—Saw a crippled fellow, today, hobbling along on a pair of crutches—smiling.

And an elderly lady trudging down the street with a basket of stale bread on her arm—cheerful.

And a wreck of humanity sitting in a park bench—just gazing into space.

Three examples of the dark side of things.

You and I and the other fellow, who have wealth, a job and enough to eat, have a lot of nerve kicking about our lot, haven't we?

Before you feel sorry for yourself, think of the other fellow.

There are 55,000 garages in these United States, and the open spaces between them are where people have blowouts.

TRY THIS ON YOUR HARP.

HEALTHGRAMS

If 100 cows were confined on an acre of splendid pasture they would soon reduce the available supply to zero. Not only so but they would, if they stay were extended, leave the acre in such a condition that no other cow would graze there for a long, long time, even though grass were plentiful. In other words the acre would be made immune to cattle grazing because of the wide distribution of their waste products.

Disease germs fare much the same way in the human body. At first they find plenty of food so that they eat and multiply. Soon their numbers become so great that they consume all of the substances upon which they delight in feeding or else they so contaminate it that bacterial life, of the sort present, is no longer possible. If the germs are those that cause measles, smallpox, or one of the several other infections, the body is left in such a condition that this sort of bacteria will not again flourish in it throughout the remainder of life.

If only one cow were confined upon an acre of good pasture land the food supply would be ample indefinitely, from season to season. Likewise the body is able to take care of a few bacteria without injury to itself and without the immediate destruction of the bacteria. If one cow should remain long enough on the same acre she would ultimately distribute her waste matter over it so thoroughly that she could no longer find suitable grazing spaces sufficient to keep her healthy. Likewise a few bacteria in the human body tend to make the conditions such that these bacteria find it unwholesome to their existence. In other words the body builds up an immunity or a resistance to that sort of bacteria.

For this reason persons who escape diphtheria, scarlet fever and some other childhood diseases for the first fifteen years of life are not thereafter apt to get these infections. We are told that most people have tuberculosis scars in their lungs. Small quantities of bacteria have found entrance to the body from time to time and have, through their activity, caused the body to build up an immunity to the existence of such bacteria or disease producing germs.

If a heavy coat of fresh stable manure be spread over an acre of good pasture land, cattle will refuse to graze there. Nibbling here and there is the most that cows will do under such circumstances. Vaccination does the same thing for the human body in reference to bacteria. Products of bacteria are injected into the blood and leave it in such a condition that other bacteria of the same sort will not tolerate it. The body is then said to be immune to the disease produced by such bacteria.

Goats and sheep will feed and thrive on pasture lands that cattle have made intolerable for themselves. This idea explains why in most cases vaccination against one sort of disease will not protect the body against another sort. And this, in turn, explains why it is usually necessary for scientists to discover and isolate the particular germ that causes a given disease before a successful vaccine can be produced.

Vaccination, then, is simply doing for the body in an artificial, easily tolerated way what bacteria may naturally do for it in a harsh, expensive and often dangerous way. It simply amounts to the recognition of a natural universal law which man has been wise enough to apply to his own well being.

An acre can be over populated with people just as easily as it can with cattle. The only way that people can possibly survive when they concentrate in great numbers on a small area—as is found in cities—is to dispose of their waste matter so carefully and so completely that it never gets mixed up with their water or food. This, of course, is called sanitation but it is by no means as simply done as it is discussed. Complete divorce of bodily waste from food and water supply is an inexorable law of

Did You Ever Stop to Think—

BY
E. R. Walte, Secretary,
Shawnee, Okla., Board of Commerce

C. K. Blandin, publisher of the St. Paul Dispatch and St. Paul Pioneer Press, says:

THAT there has been a revolution in the standard of business ethics in the last twenty-five years.

THAT big business and little business have discovered that frankness and honesty are always the best policies.

THAT railroads no longer keep expensive political lobbies in state and national capitals.

THAT other large business interests like the Standard Oil Company now lay their cards on the table and take the public into their confidences concerning the management of internal affairs of the company.

THAT no business can be a satisfactory or successful enterprise unless it is operated honestly as it affects the public as well as the best interests of the business itself.

THAT the day of newspaper political organs has passed and readers demand clean, fearless and independent mediums.

THAT no advertiser can hope to be a permanent success unless truthfulness prevails in published statements and advertising fundamentals are built on the rocks of honesty.

HONOR AND TRUTH IN PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIFE WAS NEVER SO ESSENTIAL IN ORDER TO ACHIEVE PERMANENT SUCCESS OR PERSONAL SATISFACTION AS THE PRESENT TIME.

J. W. HARRIMAN, PRESIDENT OF THE HARRIMAN NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK, SAYS:

THAT I had occasion to go to the Philippine Islands four years ago, and spent some time there visiting practically the whole of our possession, and I was amazed at the natural wealth disclosed. Now that the years are dragging and we are not taking advantage of what we possess—in fact, are beginning to suffer through the exorbitant prices of things we need and which could be produced there—I think it is high time there be some agitation and that our representatives in Congress get a bit of the sentiment beginning to prevail throughout the country.

THAT if the Administration will take the Islands in under the flag, with a territorial form of government, so that capital can step in and develop the resources of the Islands, there would be no necessity for passing the hat around for Government funds; in fact, it would be very unfortunate to have the Government enter into this situation, for there have been only misfortunes in connection with every adventure that the Government has made in a business way—for instance, our shipping and railroad experiments.

THAT of course, after the flag is raised over the Islands, an amendment or correction of the land laws will have to be made. In other words, the Jones Bill must be revised to enable capital to acquire more than 2500 acres of land per individual or corporation. In fact, there should be no restriction in this respect. The Administration would appear to be doing the issue, fearing of course, political agitation in the Islands; but they will have to face it sooner or later, for with the increasing population in this country, a larger supply of products to support the increased population will be in order, and I can see no place from which we are going to get these necessities except from our territories of which the Philippines should be one.

THAT it behooves us now to cultivate these valuable possessions so that products from these Islands may furnish our necessities, and that we shall not be at the mercy of other countries who can put their own price upon the products they sell to us.

WE SEEM TO HAVE NO VISION

WHATSOEVER I OFTEN THINK WHAT A GARDEN OF EDEN THOSE ISLANDS WOULD BE HAD THEY BEEN IN THE HANDS OF GREAT BRITAIN FOR THE PAST TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, RATHER THAN IN OUR HANDS.

New Railroad Bill for Ending Disputes Passed

Washington, Mar. 1—(AP)—The Watson Parker bill to set up new methods of settling railroad labor disputes was passed today by the House.

The measure, which now goes to the senate, would provide for abolition of the railroad labor board.

Final action was taken after the house had defeated, 232 to 16, a motion by Representative Blanton, democrat, Texas, to send the bill back to the commerce committee, with instructions to provide for enlarging the powers of an emergency board, which the measure provides as a last resort in settlement of disputes.

Good Thoughts for Good People

God is Love. What a thought—that the creator of the universe, the creator of man, is Love, infinite Love! Can we ask God to be more than Love? It is impossible, since divine Love includes within itself all reality—all that is lovable, true, beautiful, enduring, substantial, all that is good. If God were not infinite Love, without a trace of the opposite in His nature, the universe would be doomed.

Maintains Right to Meet to Discuss Communism

Washington, Mar. 1—(AP)—The right of radicals to meet and discuss the aims of the communist party provided no overt acts of violence are committed, was asserted today in a brief filed in the supreme court on behalf of Charles E. Ruthenberg, who is challenging the criminal syndicalism law of Michigan.

The case probably will be reached for argument at the present term of court.

Ruthenberg was convicted after a meeting of a secret convention of the communist party of America in the sand dunes near Bridgman, Mich., in August 1922.

20,000,000 motor vehicles now travel the American highways.

50,000,000 Americans ride in these cars every day in the year.

Safety for this vast army of travelers is a national issue, and where safety is involved plain speaking is a public duty.

It is high time the public realized—as experts have long realized—that automobile bodies should be made of steel—not of wood or any other fragile material.

Indeed, it is one of the mysteries of this usually progressive industry that the all steel body is not already in universal use.

It will be before long. Public opinion will demand it—as it now demands that railway sleeping cars be all steel.

For even a child knows that steel is stronger than wood—that steel will not splinter or burn—and that all steel bodies will stand up under impacts that would crush ordinary bodies to bits.

That is why Dodge Brothers pioneered in introducing the the all steel body—pioneered again recently, in improving and perfecting it—pioneer, now, in urging its adoption by every automobile builder in the world.

The issue is plain—

Manufacturers must build safely if the automobile industry is to hold its present high place in public usefulness and esteem.

And the all steel body—as exemplified in Dodge Brothers Motor Car—is the greatest single advance in motoring safety made in the last fifteen years.

The car will continue to be a "four." No reasoning buyer will be distracted from the issue of QUALITY by mere CYLINDER propaganda.

'SATAN IN SABLES'

By Bradley King

"Satan in Sables" with Lowell Sherman is a picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Prince Michael Iervodoff, wealthy philanthropist of Paris, tired of parasitical friends, falls honestly in love with Colette, an unworshipful girl, and rebuilds his worthless interest in life through befriending her. But he is saddened by the suicide of his young brother, Paul, who has been vamped for revenge by Dolores, one of Michael's cast-offs. Michael plans to atone for his wasteful life by a great humanitarian project.

Decbine chuckled understandingly. "Then you will be very lucky, if you will permit me to say so. You remember that night in Le Coeur Mort, Monsieur, when I told you that oil and water would never mix? I may be presuming to speak like this, and if so, I ask your pardon, but I was wrong—for that young lady would grace the palace of a king!"

"I won't put you in my black books for making that remark," Michael smiled, "and I'm glad that you approve of her."

"Approve of her? Pardon, Monsieur is Prince, who am I to presume in such a manner? All I can say is that I am overjoyed she will be there. But tell me, sir, what is your plan?"

"I have a big estate there, with many acres of ground, and I am going to arrange things so that soon an army will live there."

"An army? What do you mean, Monsieur?"

"Yes, an army, and you will be its Commander-in-Chief. An army of boys from the slums of Paris; boys who never had a chance in the world and who have missed the sunshine altogether. They will come out there and will be taught gardening, for instance. Each one will have a certain plot of ground for which he will be held strictly responsible. That will be one of your tasks! I can see it all in my mind, Decbine, as it clearly as day. Barracks will go up. The project will be developed so that boys can be there all the year round. Trades will be taught. The boys will be educated and turned out prepared to take their place in the world. Then the physical side must not be forgotten. I can picture you now putting all these youngsters through their exercises every morning with your old army snap and vigor. What do you think of the plan?"

Decbine was breathless. "A wonderful one, Monsieur, and one that I know you will find happiness in. What a world of good it will accomplish! It is wonderful, Monsieur—immense—superb! No one but you would ever think of it!"

"Then you are with me, eh?"

"With you?" Decbine gripped the steering wheel until his knuckles showed white, he glanced aside at Michael and said with tense earnestness: "Let me say something that is in my mind, Monsieur. If I may, I feel like a man once more, thanks to you, and when I fail to follow you, when I fail to be at your disposal, body and soul, night and day, well—it will be because I am out there!" He nodded his head back in the direction of the cemetery.

Michael felt too touched to make an immediate reply, but when the car stopped in front of Colette's home he grasped hands with Decbine—a long, eloquent wordless avowal of deepest friendship.

Michael found Colette sewing—and humming as she sewed. He marvelled at the joy she took in the simple little gift of flowers he brought to her.

Billy, playing in the adjoining room, came to greet Michael with grave affection.

"I have something for you, young sir," Michael announced.

Billy took this as his cue to conduct the search of Michael's pockets that was a customary formality upon the occasions of Michael's visits. His delight, as usual, was boundless when his skill in searching overcame Michael's experience in concealing—and he discovered a bag of bon bons in Michael's hat.

He proffered the dainties, first to Colette, then to Michael; each took one decorously. Colette with a little courtesy, Michael with a grave bow—greatly to Billy's amusement.

"Billy," said Michael suddenly, "your Aunt Colette has often told you of the country. How would you like to go there to live?"

"With the grass, M'sieu, and the cows?"

"Yes, and the countless trees and brooks—"

"—and the birds and butterflies, and I could have a dog of my own, and a cat, perhaps?"

"Yes, all that," Billy said.

Billy's eyes were as round and shiny and big as any of the bonbons in the bag. "Indeed I would like it, M'sieu"—and here he looked trustfully at Colette—"if Aunt goes too!"

Colette kissed Billy hungrily. Then both she and the child looked with surprise at Michael, who, keeping a straight and stern face with great difficulty, was shaking his head contrarily. "No, Billy, my plan does not include your Aunt Colette. She will not be there."

Billy's face clouded instantly and the big tears welled in his eyes. Even Colette, though she knew that Michael must be teasing, was soberly mystified. Seeing the effect of his fun, Michael's contrition led him to make swift qualifications.

"Your Aunt Colette, cannot go, Billy, because she will no longer be your Aunt—she will be your dear Mother Colette, and I will be your Daddy, for we are going to adopt you after we are married—"

Billy had a child's impatience of involved explanations; he brushed them aside to interrupt and come to the point.

"Well, then, will she be there?" pointing to Colette.

"Yes, Billy," said Michael looking into Colette's eyes for a sign that his confident hope was not unjustified—and finding it. Billy witnessed a final and wordless reassurance that all was well with this world in the tender way that Michael and Colette clasped one another's hands. But this was all quite as boring to Billy as the explanation of his adoption had threatened to become; so he merely returned with relief to his toys in the next room, and left the lovers alone.

Michael sat down and drew Colette into his lap; she cuddled there as contentedly as a kitten, while he stroked her hair and drank in the intoxicating reality of her warmth and nervousness.

After a while Colette said: "Now, dearest Michael, what was all this nonsense with which you were filling Billy's little head?"

"It was not nonsense, dearest girl, but a wonderful vision. Do you remember what I hinted to you—that day long ago in Versailles, of a plan for the accomplishment of some useful work in the world to make up for my years of idleness? Well, here is my—or really, I should say, our plan—because it is only through the inspiration of your faith and love that I could carry on."

Then he outlined to her in even greater detail what he had already explained to Decbine. Nestled against his broad chest she listened seriously, her large eyes opened to their widest and grayest. When he had finished she said:

"That is not a plan—or a vision! It is my Michael himself translated into action—into deeds. The thousands of acres of your estate on that clean and wind-blown seacoast in old Normandy are no larger than your heart. It is in there," she tapped his breast lovingly—"that the hundreds of happy, reclaimed little boys will be romping and gaining health, absorbing the truth of righteousness, and being reborn. Inside there—in the overflowing womb of your dear, fine heart!"

What could Michael say to that? Nothing—and he said it. What could he do? A great "and"—and he did it; enfolded and crushed Colette in a sweet embrace, that in its solitary minute was symbolic of all the minutes and hours and years of the immortality of their love.

Flushed, breathless, ecstatic, they were oblivious to the giggles of Billy, who had stolen in to peek; and to the horn discreetly sounded by Decbine in the street below as a reminder that it was growing late and dark.

But Billy went to sleep eventually over his toys on the floor in the next room, and Decbine went to sleep over his wheel in the parked car below; while Colette and Michael did not go to sleep, but sat in that exalted and dreamlike state of peace and blissfulness that is more unheeding than sleep, yet knows neither declining nor awakening beginning nor end, but persists timelessly forever.

THE END.

The YELLOW STUB by Ernest Lynn

COPYRIGHT 1926 BY NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

HENRY RAND, middle-aged business man, expected home by his family to celebrate his son JIMMY'S 21st birthday, is found murdered in a cheap hotel.

The only clues are a woman's handkerchief and the stub of a yellow ticket from the Paragon Theater in Cleveland.

Jimmy and DETECTIVE MOONEY go to Cleveland, where they trace the yellow stub to a THOMAS FOGARTY.

Jimmy's sister, JANET, breaks her engagement with BARRY COLVIN, Jimmy's best friend. While Jimmy is in Cleveland trying to run down the murderer, he meets MARY LOWELL.

Later he and Mooney confront Fogarty, who gives a plausible alibi and says he never used the theater ticket, but gave it to a woman named Olga Maynard.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER X

JIMMY and Detective Mooney left Fogarty, climbed into a taxicab, gave the driver the address Fogarty had shown them and settled back on the leather cushions.

"Well, Rand, our job's pretty near done. By God, I knew that handkerchief meant something!"

"Mooney," said Jimmy. "Do you think this woman killed my father?"

"I don't know how you feel, Rand. You just can't square yourself with the fact that there was a woman mixed up in it. You know your father wasn't that kind. Isn't that it?"

Rand nodded. "Well, you'll probably get more than one job out of this before you're through. You can't get away from the fact that this Maynard woman was mixed up in the murder. She says she's leaving the next day for Grafton. They find the ticket stub in the room—and a woman's handkerchief."

"Mind, I'm not saying she committed the murder. But she was in the room. She knows who did it. Well, here we are, I'll pile out and see if she lives here."

The cab had stopped. Mooney sprang out and ran into an apartment building. In a few minutes he was back. He gave the driver an address and climbed into the taxi.

"Just as I thought," he commented. "Doesn't live there any more. Moved away two weeks ago. The janitor gave me her forwarding address."

The cab stopped again. This time Jimmy jumped out with Mooney. They found themselves on the porch of a rooming house. "Quite a come-down from that apartment," observed Mooney. "Probably found it hard to keep up with the rent, being out of a job."

He rang the bell. "The landlady will like this," he said. "It's after midnight."

A window opened on the second floor. Jimmy and the detective were down on the porch. A woman's head thrust itself out of the window. "Lady live here by the name of Olga Maynard?" called Mooney.

"No. She moved out a week ago." "Say where she was going?" "She said she was leaving town." The window closed with a bang.

The night yielded them nothing more. They went back to Fogarty's room, where that worthy furnished them with a description of Olga Maynard.

"Nothing more that I can do here," Mooney said to Jimmy later. "I'm taking the train tomorrow back to Grafton and see if I can run down the Maynard woman there. Before I go I'll report to the chief of police here and leave the handkerchief and ticket with him. And here's a card of introduction to the chief in case you run into a jam while you're here. You're staying, I take it?"

"I'm seeing it through, Mooney."

The next morning Jimmy called at the offices of the Q. and R. Railroad. "You see," he said to Mary Lowell. "It didn't take me long to take advantage of your offer. I can use that job—if there's one here."

She seemed pleased to see him. "I'm glad you did, Mr. Rand. I spoke about you to Mr. Hilton—he's the chief clerk—and he said to show you in if you came."

Mr. Hilton thought there was something he could do. "You came pretty well recommended," he added, turning toward Mary and smiling.

She blushed, and started typing furiously.

"How much education have you had?" asked the chief clerk.

"Two years of college. I didn't graduate. I enlisted during the war, and when it was over I didn't go back to school."

"What branch?" "Air service."

"I see," Hilton surveyed the tall figure for a moment, then—"I think I'll take you on, Rand. Twenty-five a week is all I can give you to start. When can you begin?"

"I'm ready to take my coat off right now, Mr. Hilton."

The passing days brought no word from Mooney, nor did they bring Rand any success in his search for Olga Maynard. Jimmy was a frequent visitor at police headquarters where he had been referred by the chief to Lieutenant O'Day, a gruff old war horse whom Jimmy, nevertheless, liked instantly.

He saw much of Mary. They had

The spoon that Jimmy had been toying with fell with a clatter to the floor.

even met outside one day during lunch hour—quite accidentally—and had eaten together, she insisting on paying her own check.

He asked her to let him call. He had been trying for days to summon enough courage to ask her, and when he did he cursed himself for his schoolboy shyness and stammering.

"Why certainly," she said warmly and made him sorry he hadn't asked her before.

Her mother was a widow. Her chief complaint against life, he found when he called, was the fact that Mary had to work.

The Lovells, he gathered from her conversation, had once "amounted to something."

"Mother does live so much in the past," Mary confided to Jimmy later. "When father was living we never thought about money. There seems to be plenty of it. He died suddenly and his affairs were not in the best of shape. What little money we left after things had been settled was soon gone. It was necessary for me to leave school. Mother thinks a perfectly dreadful to have to depend on me for support. . . . I rather like it myself. I'm perfectly thrilled about my work."

Jimmy got the impression of hostility on the part of Mrs. Lowell. He felt somehow that she hoped Mary would marry well—somebody with a lot of money. . . . He felt uncomfortable in her presence.

A few nights later he took Mary to the theater.

"Don't let's go home just yet," he suggested afterward. Being alone with her had made him unaccountably gay. "I feel like dissipation. What do you say if we go some place and get a bite to eat and dance?"

"Lovely," she agreed. "Well, let's go to the Cafe Madrid. The music there is wonderful."

They found the Madrid filled with a noisy crowd; they were lucky to get a table.

"You were right about the music," he declared when they were on the floor. . . . His arm was around her waist—he was breathing the fragrance of her hair. . . . He thrilled. She seemed instinctively to attract him. . . . He clattered vainly for an encore when the orchestra stopped playing.

"You seem as clever at dancing as you are at rescuing young ladies," she bantered when they were back at their table.

"Lady," he said, "the young man is speechless. I have been trying for two minutes to think of words to describe something—and there aren't any such words. . . . You dance like a—like a breath. There—that's as close as I can come."

She laughed, and impulsively reached over and mussed his hair with her hand—then immediately flew away in confusion. She blushed.

"Mr. Rand," she said. "You—"

"Not Mr. Rand," he interrupted. "Jimmy. I've already decided to call you Mary. Eventually, you know, why not now?"

"I don't think Jimmy suits you," he said. "It's so—so diminutive. I think Jim fits you better. You're too big to be called Jimmy; it's too boyish. I was thinking, though, of what you said that night about hoping you wouldn't have to stay in Cleveland. You've never told me what brought you here from Grafton."

He hesitated. "I've decided not to tell you just yet," he said. "Please," he urged at her look of inquiry, and took her hand. "Please don't think it's a secret. I'm afraid to confide in you. Let me tell you later."

She shrugged. "I'm sure it's not necessary." She withdrew her hand. There was an awkward pause.

In the silence that followed Jimmy saw clearly the snapshots of conversation from an adjacent table, two men were chatting idly over their coffee.

"Across the room there," he heard one say. "The blond. See? Hang it, what's her name now? The devil take it, I can never think of a name when I want to."

At the next words Jimmy started. The spoon that he had been toying with fell with a clatter to the floor. . . . His arm was around her waist—he was breathing the fragrance of her hair. . . . He thrilled. She seemed instinctively to attract

him. . . . He clattered vainly for an encore when the orchestra stopped playing.

"You seem as clever at dancing as you are at rescuing young ladies," she bantered when they were back at their table.

"Lady," he said, "the young man is speechless. I have been trying for two minutes to think of words to describe something—and there aren't any such words. . . . You dance like a—like a breath. There—that's as close as I can come."

RE-DISCOVERING ILLINOIS

By LESTER B. CROSBY

Illinois Chamber of Commerce

Twenty-five years ago there was one bank in Benton, Ill. Benton is the county seat of Franklin county. That's way down the state, the fourth tier of counties north of Cairo. It was settled by Southerners who emigrated from Virginia, the Carolinas and Kentucky. You are in the bird dog country when you get down here; covets of quail a bit out of the towns.

Benton was slumbering quietly one day, according to best recollections about the year 1902. The only bank in the town was in a little room, 12x30 feet. It was operated by Ward & Moore. The cashier had gone home to lunch. A game of horseshoes was going on in the street for there was no law. The bank was in charge of a boy.

Suddenly a broad hatted stranger entered wearing rough garb and heavy boots. Quietly he told the youth in charge that he'd like to make a deposit. Pulling a roll out of his pocket he counted out fifty $1,000 bills and added a check for $175,000.

When the cashier stepped out to lunch the deposits in the lone bank in Franklin county totaled $38,000. When he came back from lunch they totaled $323,000. The coal mining industry had come to Franklin county. The stranger was Joe Leiter.

There are twenty banks in Franklin county today. Eighteen of them are either state or national banks. The combined deposits of the twenty on December 31, 1925, totaled $11,387,333.65. Seven of these twenty banks are in Benton; of the money, $3,640,992.07 was deposited there. The rest is mostly in new towns that sprang into existence under the magic of coal.

Coal has done some very remarkable things in developing Franklin county. Here are a few figures:

| Year | Population |
|------|------------|
| 1850 | 5,681 |
| 1860 | 8,393 |
| 1870 | 12,122 |
| 1880 | 17,138 |
| 1890 | 19,673 |
| 1900 | 25,903 |
| 1910 | 27,293 |

The county's population today is estimated at 65,000. That means that approximately three-quarters of its increase in population has come in the last twenty-five years.

Engineers have estimated that in Seam No. 6 the one now being worked, there are in this one county alone 2,500,000,000 tons of coal. The seam runs from seven to fourteen feet thick. It was opened in 1903 and to date about 150,000,000 tons have been mined. The potential capacity of all mines in the country is about 20,000,000 tons a year.

Approximately one-half of these are working and some of them only half heartedly. The coal is there and the miners are there but the market cannot consume all the coal. Operators say that the reason is this: they find difficulty in competing with non-union fields in other states where the miners' pay is lower.

Mining men told me that there are in Franklin county five mines which sometime or other have held the world's record for coal production in one day.

Here is something else about mining. With 150,000,000 tons of coal mined in Franklin county accidents by explosion, in taking out the first 75,000,000 tons, cost 118 lives. In mining the second 75,000,000 there were only eight deaths laid to explosions. Five of these eight occurred in one mine only a few weeks ago.

"Rock Dust Johnny" Jones lives in Benton. Mining folk used to think Johnny a bit queer. He had a theory that mine explosions could be stopped. It seems simple. Mine explosions are caused by gas and dust. Coal dust, properly mixed with oxygen, is highly explosive.

A spark or a lighted match in a mine may start an explosion. There isn't much of a blast at the starting point. But it grows as it sweeps down the mine until it becomes a wild rush and a roar that takes everything before it.

Not long ago, I was told, a miner wrapped his coat around a lamp and scratched a match inside it. He thought that would make the flame safe. When they picked up his body they found the half burned match and the coat was still wrapped about the lamp. But hundreds of other lives were saved, 1100 men in the mine that day, due to the theories of "Rock Dust Johnny" Jones and a few co-workers.

In short, this is the theory. Rock dust isn't explosive. An explosion must have an explosive mixture. The walls of the mines, the ceilings and floors are treated with rock dust. That makes them look as if whitewashed. The rock dust is put on with a sort of air-brush; blown on.

Next—At points across the tunnels there are placed, near the ceiling, delicately balanced troughs filled with rock dust. When an explosion starts somewhere down the shaft a rush of air comes out ahead of the explosion. That unbalances the trough of rock dust and precipitates it into the air.

When the explosion strikes that section of air is filled with rock dust which will not explode. Thousands of men, perhaps, owe their lives to this explosion prevention work. "Rock dusting" the walls and ceilings is presumed to keep an explosion from starting. But if it does start the spilling of the rock dust is the second line of intrenchment. The point is that it works and lives are saved.

"Rock Dust Johnny" Jones travels throughout the coal mining districts at odd times at behest of the United States government and preaches his lifesaving methods.

Benton has been an important point in southern Illinois since the earliest days. John A. Logan, long before wartime glories made him a general, came to Benton a struggling young lawyer with his bride. Benton was an important town, politically and otherwise, in pre-Civil War days. It was one of that little group of cities chosen for the Lincoln-Douglas debates.

Hereabouts the countryfolk farmed, quietly and rather contentedly, until the coal mines "came in." They had farmed not too scientifically. The soil is thin with much clay and it washes quickly. For years it had been "corned and wheated to death." With the coming of the mines, and mine pay, farmers flocked to the towns. There came to be, in time, many abandoned farms. In flush periods the mines meant silk shirts; the farms never meant more than blue denim shirts. Mines meant six-cylinder cars; farms only Fords or Buicks.

One would think that with towns growing and mines with money to spend agriculture would have boomed. Instead mining came to be a curse on the farms. But the day is changing.

Mining now appears to be on the decline. It is not for lack of coal but for lack of market. Robert R. Ward, Benton banker, has a handsomely equipped farm just out of Benton with typical corn belt buildings, or better, on it: good blooded stock and a group of silos.

Walter S. Williams, attorney, has another in the opposite direction with substantial buildings, blooded black cattle, fine mules, fullblood hogs and fancy chickens. Mr. Ward's wheat, I was told, run 30 to 34 bushels an acre. Mr. Williams is experimenting in alfalfa. Both have used the recognized crushed limestone dressing to counteract acidity in the soil and have followed that with sweet-clover plowed under.

In the edge of Benton is an artificial lake, Lake Moses, with a 37-mile shore line and on it the Sunnyside Club. The lake was built by the U. S. Fuel Co., subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Corp., which has extensive properties in the vicinity. Anyone in the county may belong to the club, established by the company, if of good moral standing and willing to put up $15 a year.

Fishing, swimming, boating and picnicking are summertime sports on the lake. Living in these southern Illinois towns is improving. The made-lakes and the country clubs improve social conditions and spring arrives about three weeks ahead of Chicago's spring.

One of the stories I heard was that when the mine operators first came in they bought the coal rights in some of these lands for $2 an acre and that most of it was bought for $20 an acre or less. Farmers saw the coal as a mortgage lifter. But under every acre is 15,000 to 20,000 tons of coal! Imagine selling 20,000 tons of coal for $2.

When you see these farm lands, little being done with them as a rule, one wonders if perhaps the owners may not be sleeping on other wealth of which they know not the value thereof.

PEOPLE'S COLUMN

Editor of the Telegraph: I wish to make a statement regarding conditions as I found them in Florida.

My main destination was Vero Beach, to visit my friend, George Fruin, and I was very much surprised after what I had heard before leaving home to find that one can meet with such very moderate prices, both in hotels and rooming houses, also in board, etc.

Of course, before leaving, I wired Mr. Fruin when I would arrive, and in the meanwhile, he arranged for quarters for me at the rooming house where he lives, it costing me $1.00 per day for a room in a very nice convenient little hotel. Also I boarded at the same place where he and Mr. Dan Hogan of Rochelle, Ill. boarded. This boarding house is run by a lady named Mrs. Tippin. The meals set out by Mrs. Tippin are the most wonderful meals that I have ever eaten at a boarding house, and the cost was 50c per meal. She has on the table everything that a hungry man might desire to eat, and her pleasant way in taking care of her patrons is something that is very becoming to her business.

There are six hotels in town. One 40-room hotel just recently opened, and the price per room is $2 per day. In fact, you can get hotel accommodations in the City of Vero Beach anywhere from $1.00 to $5.00 per day.

I was greatly impressed with this remarkable little town, and have great confidence in the future development of it. It is backed up by a wonderful agricultural country raising all kinds of citrus fruit and garden vegetables.

There are many new developments going on at the ocean beach which are being put on by the Alfred Waggs Corporation, also a syndicate from Detroit, Michigan, which represents $60,000,000.

One week after arriving at Vero Beach, I went over to an inland town named Wachula, and visited some old friends of mine there, at which place I had a very delightful time. Then I returned to Vero Beach spending another week or so there with Mr. Fruin and then took a run down to Palm Beach and Miami. At Palm Beach I visited an old time friend of mine who used to live in Dixon, Grant Funk. Mr. Funk is in the contracting business and has been very successful in 24 years time as a resident of Palm Beach. I also had a delightful time with him and his family, and had a very hard time getting away after which I returned to Vero Beach to spend another week there with my friend and Mr. Hogan.

I wish to state that the people I met while in this city as well as other cities that I visited, are of the very best class and highest type people that I have ever met in my life, and I am quite sure that Vero Beach will develop into one of the real cities of the East Coast.

Strawberries are ripe now, and of the finest quality. Potatoes are in bloom, and farmers are planting corn of which I saw a field four inches high.

The East Coast Railroad has been in operation 25 years, and it is now being double tracked and will be completed within the next four months. This will be the first double tracked system in Florida which will be of great benefit to all towns on the East Coast.
